Water Proof Warehouse.
HAMBURG, September 20, 1841.
THE Subscriber begs leave to inform his friends and the public, that he continues the WAREHOUSE and COMMISSION BUSINESS, at his former stand, known as the Water Proof Warehouse.
Detached as it is from other buildings, its location renders it nearly as secure from fire, as if it were fire proof. The floors of its two wings have been elevated above the high water mark of the great freshet of May 1840; and each of these divisions of the building, will store from 1,500 to 1,800 bales of Cotton, both of these are designed to be exclusively set apart for the Cotton planters and country merchants, who will thus be secured from the possibility of loss and damage by fire-shots.
He avails himself of the present occasion, to return his thanks to his friends and patrons, for their liberal support during the last season. He solicits from them, and the public generally, a continuance of this confidence, and assures them, that in return for their patronage he will use his best personal efforts to promote and protect their interest committed to his charge; in addition to this assurance, he pledges himself, that he will in no case purchase a bale of Cotton, directly or indirectly.
He will attend to the sale and shipping of Cotton, the receiving and forwarding of Goods, or any other business usually transacted by a Commission Merchant.

Factorage & Commission Business,
HAMBURG, S. C.
AS I have declined selling goods, I beg leave to return my grateful acknowledgments to my friends, and the public generally, for their liberal patronage while thus engaged. I now offer my services to the public as an Agent, to receive and forward all kinds of merchandise and produce. And as I will not be engaged in any other business, I will pay strict attention to the interest of all those consigning their produce or merchandise to me, and while in my hands the best care will be taken, and forwarded with despatch, or orders promptly obeyed.
From experience and observation, I have long thought that a faithful agent could render considerable service to the planters, in selling their cotton and flour, and buying their groceries; And as I have been engaged in this market for the last ten years, and acquainted with the general routine of business, I therefore offer my services to my friends and the planters generally; and will faithfully devote my undivided attention to the interest of all those who may commit to my charge the selling of their produce, and buying such articles as they may order.
In all cases, my commission shall be moderate.
